President Barack Obama
The White House
1600 Pennsylvania Avenue
Washington, DC

Dear President Obama:

We write to ask you to reinstate funding for abstinence education in your budget proposal. We believe an accurate examination of an abstinence program would cause you to change your views. We write as Democrats, as Republicans, as Independents. Young people tell us that until abstinence-centered education programs (as currently funded by Congress) came to their school, no one gave them the tools they needed to abstain from sex. Many tell us that even though they had sex in the past, now they are going to wait because of newfound confidence in themselves as a result of abstinence programs.

Despite what critics say, there is a growing body of research revealing that youth who receive abstinence-centered education are significantly less likely to initiate sexual activity than their peers. Sexually experienced students are more likely to discontinue their sexual activity as a result of the skills and encouragement received in abstinence education classes. We cannot turn our backs on this promising evidence just as our youth are responding to the positive message of abstinence as never before.

Research also shows that those students who were a part of an abstinence program, but go on to become sexually active, are no less likely to use a condom than their peers, but still have fewer partners. We know that limiting lifetime partners is important to decreasing the spread of STDs, but avoiding sexual activity is the only way to completely avoid the risk. Beyond the physical consequences, however, there are also significant potential emotional consequences to adolescent sexual activity. Abstinence education helps teens avoid these negative, emotional outcomes by empowering them to make decisions that benefit their overall health.

With President Clinton signing Title V abstinence education into law and President Bush signing SPRANS-CBAE abstinence education into law, it is clear that concern for youth crosses both sides of the aisle.

Parents and local communities must be able to decide which approach they prefer and that is only possible if we have separate, equitable, dedicated funding streams – one for comprehensive sex education and one for abstinence education. We respectfully ask that you put aside the misinformation you've received about abstinence education and change your position. Our youth deserve a strong primary prevention message regarding their sexual health. Only currently funded abstinence-centered education will provide this risk avoidance strategy.

Sincerely,

The National Abstinence Education Association
